Furniture and toys for children made from genuine Japanese cypress wood (hinoki)
-by IKONIH-

-IKONIH- Furniture and toys for children, each handcrafted by skilled craftsmen in Japan from unvarnished, unpainted hinoki wood.

Note: For parts that require strength, we use ^{*}FSC certified American walnut wood. This simple two-tone color scheme is designed to fit any interior design layout.

* FSC certification = Certification given to timber produced in an economically sustainable manner that is in the interest of the local community as well as local forest environments.

Uses only natural Japanese cypress (hinoki) wood

“Natural wood” is wood that has been cut from logs. Unlike “glued wood” that has been made into blocks with adhesives, natural wood has a texture and warmth not found in processed wood. Natural wood is unique in that you can feel the grain, and, as it ages over time, you will notice that it acquires a deep amber color with a pronounced and beautiful wood grain, not found in laminated or processed timber products.

Unpainted and unvarnished to cultivate rich sensitivity

All products come with sandpaper for cleaning. By all means, clean IKONIH products together with your children.

IKONIH products are made without chemical paints, so parents can rest assured that even small children can play safely.

Each piece of wood, like humans, is unique. Each has a rich personality, with traits such as color, knots, grain, and fragrance. Because of the unpainted finish, you can notice the individuality of the wood, feel the texture, and smell the natural fragrance. Wood can even be tasted. Wood nurtures a sensitive heart.

Another feature of unpainted wood products is that their original appearance can be restored by sanding scratches and dirt. By sanding, the fragrance of hinoki will be restored. IKONIH believes that moku-iku or ‘wood education’ teaches that restoration and care of wood products should be done by adults and children together.

Things to learn from IKONIH’s Moku-iku or “wood education”

- 1 Develop rich sensitivity through handling and care of natural wood.
- 2 Become aware of Japanese culture by observing the aging process of wood.
- 3 Foster a heart that values taking care of the things we have.
- 4 Learn how to care for trees.
- 5 Be inspired to think about forests and environmental issues.

The concept of moku-iku was born in Hokkaido in 2004. IKONIH defines “moku-iku” as “an activity that seeks to understand trees, their life cycle, and contributes to the creation of sustainable living”. With IKONIH’s concept of moku-iku, you can nurture a heart that values things through taking care of your precious possessions. In addition, by knowing the circumstances of forests, you come to understand that our lives are deeply connected to the natural world. When children grow up, this experience and learning from moku-iku will be passed on to the next generation. IKONIH believes that children touching trees now helps create the lives of children in the future.

Hinoki’s unexpected and unknown charms

Hinoki is a tree that grows natively in Japan and has long supported the lives of the Japanese people. Hinoki is not only rich in fragrance but also has a wide variety of excellent properties, such as antibacterial, antifungal and insect repellent effects, and many research results have been published to support its positive benefits on health. In the brain science community, research results show that the component α -pinene contained in hinoki even supports neurogenesis (a phenomenon in which new neurons are born in the brain).

Antibacterial and sterilization effect suppresses the occurrence of mold.

Deodorizing and fragrance effect masking of unpleasant smells.

Insect control effect
suppresses the movement of ticks and termites.

Relaxation effect
the same refreshing effect as a walk in the woods.

The forests of the future grow by cutting and using trees.

Japan's forests are affected by the lack of proper maintenance. Improper maintenance means that timber that cannot be used for construction is often left in the mountains to cause damage to cities and villages when landslides occur due to excessive rainfall.

Cutting trees for human use is in itself not a bad thing. What is important is to follow a well-planned planting and logging cycle to enable sustainable forests long into the future.

IKONIH is concerned with helping children learn the true role of forests and wood as well as encouraging the idea that we need to protect our precious environment. IKONIH hopes that by touching, smelling, and tasting our products, this idea will become ingrained in children.

Custom-made furniture and natural wood environments for kindergartens and nurseries.

By making effective use of natural materials and arranging them in convivial settings, a child's rich sensitivity is nurtured. Touching the real thing is knowing the real thing ... IKONIH believes that experiencing moku-iku or "wood education" in kindergarten or nursery school leads to a greater sense of creativity and curiosity in the children who will create the future world. Furniture can be made to order according to layout. Please contact us for further information. Please contact your local governmental agency for further information about subsidies.

The photo is an actual construction example. Natural wood floors, walls and ceilings are possible. Changing the classroom and the furniture in it to unpainted natural hinoki will not only bring a sense of unity, but also add texture and fragrance to the room.

COLUMN

Creating a friendly environment for all children

Studies have shown that children who learn in environments with wooden structures with stable humidity due to the humidity control function of wood are less susceptible to colds and influenza than children who learn in reinforced concrete (RC) school structures. According to actual survey results, wooden school buildings have low class closure rates due to influenza, and it is thought that the effects of a humidity controlled environment are being demonstrated. In addition, we believe that the humidity control function of wood also can help to suppress asthma (bronchial asthma) caused by bacterial and viral infections.

How about creating natural environments for your school that are healthful to all kindergarteners?

How to care for unpainted Hinoki

- For scratches

If scratches or dirt are found, you can repair them by applying the sandpaper that comes with the product.

- When a toy gets wet or has been in a child's mouth

Please dry the toy in the shade as cracks may occur due to drying in direct sunlight. After the toy has been in a child's mouth, it is recommended to wipe that part with a damp cloth.

- When sap comes out

Because it is unpainted, sap or resin may ooze out of the wood during warm weather. Lightly apply the sandpaper that comes with the product, and then wipe off dust and sap with commercially available ethanol
